AUDIENCE SCORE Trailer ADD YOUR RATING Movie Info Police Detective Brooke Williams and her partner Detective Ben Adler are investigating the discovery of a body from the old Baltimore docks. Brooke asks the grieving husband himself, Doctor Daniel Jonas, who studies death and graveyards around the world, to show her where she can find the body of the old man. Brooke is amazed and somewhat perplexed by her partner's vehemence and his apparent concern that the discovery of the body might come to light. She is also startled by the sheer wealth of Doctor Jonas' collection of grave furniture and has no idea how to handle the possible crack in her colleagues' marriage. As they continue to investigate the case, Daniel reveals that he is a former gravedigger and a professor of death who believes in a preternatural awareness of the dead, a personification of death, that lives in graveyards all over the world. It is this belief that has drawn the attention of a sinister criminal, a psychopath who is murderous and sadistic, as well as a sorcerer with unusual powers. You mean in this picture there is something super, other than that old and ugly theme we've been seeing for years and years? I like it already. This is a fairly good looking thriller. The first 90 minutes are very slow and they build up nicely with all the conflict and stuff that goes down. There are probably some things in this film that are beyond the usual one liners. There is much to recommend this film. It is an interesting film to look at and observe, and a good intellectual exercise. It is a film that you have to see yourself. A really nice little movie. A really

Q: Return multiple values from function I'm calling a function that can return one of many values. I need to collect the value for each function call. I've tried a lot of different ways. I'm not very experienced with function returning values. Some of them are: void Create(int index, int numActivities) { numActivities++; int *activityArray = new int[numActivities]; activityArray[numActivities-1] = index; // If I use this, I can't access activityArray printf("This is the activity array: "); for (int index = 1; index
